Just a drill

La Plata High School held an emergency drill last month. At the suggestion of high school students, the drill was held at a time that is not usually designated for emergency drills. Drills are held to prepare students and staff to follow protocol in case of an emergency during the school day. La Plata Principal Douglass Dolan foresees holding more drills during class changes or lunch to keep students and staff aware of procedures in the event of an emergency.

Hopkins named CCPS 2018 Teacher of the Year

If you don't love Shakespeare, then you have never been a student in Lynn Hopkins' language arts class. The longtime Milton M. Somers Middle School teacher has a knack for turning what some say is hard-to-read content into stories that students grow to love.

For Hopkins, this is an easy feat because she loves what she teaches. "Working with people was my life 'calling' in the sense of sharing something I love with those around me, like the love of literature and writing," Hopkins said of her choice to become a teacher.

Not only does Hopkins share her passion for teaching and literature with her classes; her passion for education is visible in all that she does.

She exudes kindness, compassion and a commitment to help her students reach their highest potential.

For these reasons and more, Hopkins was named the Charles County Public Schools 2018 Teacher of the Year.

Although Hopkins knew she was an award finalist, she had no idea she was selected for the honor until school staff arranged a special ceremony to surprise her with the news.

Somers Principal Carrie Akins arranged for several of Hopkins' students to help in the surprise. Hopkins said she was shocked by the news.

"I had absolutely no idea. Ms. Akins did

Project Graduation will be held from 9 p.m. to 1 a.m. May 31, June 1 and 2 at the PE building on the La Plata campus of the College of Southern Maryland. Lynn Hopkins, right, a language arts teacher at Milton M. Somers Middle School, talks with sixth grader Kyra Shafer during class. Hopkins was named the Charles County Public Schools 2018 Teacher of the Year.

such a beautiful job keeping the announcement secret until the big reveal, and I have to admit — having my students be a part of it was overwhelming and wonderful. I wouldn't want it any other way. It's always about them and this award goes to my students just as much as it does to me," Hopkins said.

Somers sixth grader Kyra Shafer helped to surprise her language arts teacher with the news and said Hopkins is the type of teacher who stands out. "She was in shock and started to cry. She is such an amazing teacher. If you are having a bad day and then walk in to Mrs. Hopkins class, it immediately changes to a positive day. She 110 percent deserves the Teacher of the Year award," Shafer said.

In a recent lesson, Hopkins asked her students to develop Shakespearean "insults" to share with their classmates.

Students lined up, faced a partner and traded their insults using words commonly found in Shakespearean works, such as frothy, dizzy eyed and haggard. The class erupted in laughter while sharing their insults, which Hopkins told her students is an important part of the learning process for understanding literature.

"This gives you a chance to learn the language, how you can present words with emotion and shows you that the way you speak — the diction — can have an effect on others," Hopkins said to her class.

The way Hopkins presents content and how she speaks to her students has a positive impact on them, which in turn pushes them to grasp class lessons and take ownership in their learning. Her students are confident learners who eagerly await her class. Hopkins goes out of her way to make sure her students know that they matter and are supported.

Sixth grader Evan Adams enjoys Hopkins' class because he said she makes learning fun and incorporates content for students with different learning needs. "She makes class interactive. She introduces things, like Shakespeare, in a fun way. We learn in lots of different ways, which helps to keep us focused," Adams said.

One of fun ways in which Hopkins approaches teaching is through the occasional use of an alter ego, "Lady Hipkins," who hails from Shakespearean times.

Hopkins turns on the alter ego to engage students in learning about diction and literature. Lady Hipkins challenges her students to use higher-level thinking and questioning skills and to work together during fun and engaging classroom activities.
